What are the benefits of attending a residential?

The overwhelming change in children seen by staff is a boost in their confidence and resilience, particularly for those less confident prior to the residential. Staff put this new confidence down to:

- •Being able to try new things in a safe way
- •Staying overnight with friends and away from parents; and
- •Having to be generally more responsible for themselves and each other.

After the children have been on residential we notice:

•They become much more willing to have a go at new activities, transfer skills they learned on the residential; and persevere with harder challenges.

•Their relationships improve, we also notice significant differences after the residential. Friendship's deepen,

• friendship groups widen and antagonism reduce between those

•children who don't usually get on. As a result classes can become calmer, learning doesn't get disrupted and

• playtimes are more fun for everyone.

•Children who also lack confidence prior to the residential are viewed differently by their peers, because if they

• show skills in areas that others don't have, this new gained

•appreciation lasts back once the children are in school.
